We are pleased to inform you that the interdisciplinary conference: "Language and the space of ethnocultural dialogue" within the research project "Historia nationem gignit" will be held in the Institute of History of Saint-Petersburg State University in March, 22-24, 2017.

Specialists in philology, linguistics, history, sociology, political science, social and cultural anthropology, ethnology, imagology, art criticism are invited to take part in this conference. The participation of postgraduate students, masters and undergraduate students is welcome.

This is the fourth conference in the series of conferences "Nations and ethnicity in Humanities and Social sciences" which are held in Saint-Petersburg State University. The researchers of the phenomena of ethnicity, nations and nationalism have to deal with the issues of language in different capacities: firstly, language is considered to be one of the markers of identities and the way of making boundaries between groups; secondly; the "ethnic" and the "social" are discursive phenomena, and thus, they have linguistic nature. The committee also would like potential participants of the conference to focus on the issues of correlation between genesis of language and formation of ethnic communities, the issue of the language as a factor of internal and intercommunicative unity; the role of language as the medium of intercultural interaction as a result of which the transformation of identities happen. From our viewpoint, the dialogues of the specialists examining the issues from different positions - philologists and scholars of social phenomena — will help not only to raise the level of the discussion, but also to fill some lacunas in the studies of ethnicity, nations and nationalism.

The committee would like potential participants to concentrate on the issues not only in its stadial, restricted by certain period, perspective, but also in a wider context, in the methodological sense. Consequently, the committee of the conference offers to discuss the following questions:

1. Philological disciplines and studies of ethnicity, nation and nationalism — the possibility of a dialogue.
2. The correlation of genesis of language and ethnic communities: continuity and discontinuity (formation of language, formation and development of literary language, contemporary language; social, political and cultural communities)
3. Literary language as reality of Renaissance Europe
4. Language and formation of modern nations
5. The issues of acculturation: from the Middle Ages to contemporary times
6. Discourse analysis
7. Language as a marker of identities and the way of constructing boundaries.
8. The issues of socialization of language
9. Constructing languages
10. Language as a means of social restriction
11. Language in everyday practices (ethno-methodology and other approaches)
12. Racism and language

The working languages of the conference are English and Russian.
